Demographics: Charters vs Traditional Public Schools

The charts below give the average percentages of English language learners (ELL); total special education students (Students with Disabilities); special education students in self-contained classrooms; and students in temporary housing in charter and traditional public elementary and K-8 schools in the city’s Community School Districts.

Charter schools are in red and traditional public schools are in blue. The averages are from the 2013-14 school year, calculated using public data from the NYC Department of Education. Some Community School Districts do not have elementary or K-8 charter schools and so are not included.

Students are considered homeless or living in temporary housing if they are (1) living in emergency and transitional shelters licensed by local social service departments and the Office of Children and Family Services and transitional living programs, (2) temporarily residing in a hotel or motel because they have lost their permanent housing (this can include students who are placed in a hotel or motel by a local social services department or families who have moved to a motel or hotel on their own due to loss of housing) or (3) “Doubled-up” which means students who are sharing the housing of others because they have lost their housing or sue to economic hardship or similar reasons.

The category also includes students awaiting foster care placement and those who checked off "other temporary living situation" on address paperwork submitted at each school.
